Al Jazeera’s experience in an academic book

Al Jazeera Center for Studies has published a 300-page book examining the impact of Al Jazeera Media Network on media, politics and academic research at both regional and international levels. The book was written by a number of academics and researchers who analyzed the history of Al Jazeera and its influence on media and political landscapes. The book is being issued on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of Al Jazeera.

The book explores Al Jazeera’s various audiences and their relationships with the Network. It also discusses the prospects of the Network in the context of the fast-paced changes taking place within the media industry, the Arab region and the world. Dr. Ezzeddine Abdelmoula, Manager of Research at AJCS, supervised the process of producing the book. He pointed out that Al Jazeera has been a focus point of many researchers, studies and theses in Arab and international universities.

“Fifteen researchers and academics contributed to this book which was prepared over the past year. They present their views about Al Jazeera and its content, in addition to its impact on the world. The book will be a valuable resource for those researchers and academics who are interested in Al Jazeera as a column of the media industry,” said Abdelmoula.
